Problem Statement

Many music listeners switch between streaming platforms due to quality, cost, preference, etc. but struggle to transfer their playlists as easily; the process of manually adding songs and checking for duplicates can be frustrating for those with an ample amount of songs.

Who is experiencing this problem?

Anyone who wishes to switch from one music streaming platform to another or own accounts on multiple music streaming platforms but keep their playlists and the songs in it the same.

What is the problem?

The problem is that manually transferring songs from one music streaming platform to another is inconvenient, time consuming, and can also lead to duplicates.

Why does it matter?

Reducing the time spent on playlist transfers allows users to focus more on enjoying their music rather than managing their music library and worrying that a song might have been missed while manually transferring all the songs.
